

t's not unusual to hear that one of the Real Housewives has had plastic surgery. But New Jersey's Jacqueline Laurita broke the mold by actually talking about it! Back in 2013, the candid reality star revealed she'd had everything from a tummy tuck to a neck-lift and a boob reduction. And since, the 46-year-old has admitted to some above-the-neck tweaks as well—including Botox and wrinkle fillers. In her new beauty and style book, Get Itl, the former cosmetologist writes that "Botox immobilizes the muscles that cause forehead wrinkles, crow's-feet, the lines between the eyebrows and cleavage creases." She also suggests readers may benefit from fillers and laser treatments. She should know, according to experts. "Botox injections are blocking out her frown lines quite well and preventing crow's-feet from reappearing," observes Philadelphia plastic surgeon Dr. Lyle Back (not the mom of three's doctor). "Fillers are also being used nicely in the hollows under her eyes, to lift her cheeks a bit and to plump her lips." In addition, Jacqueline's sleek complexion indicates use of "Ultherapy or laser skin tightening like fraxel," notes North Carolina plastic surgeon Dr. John Zannis, who also does not treat the star. Dr. Back suspects not all of Jacqueline's facial work is noninvasive, though. "Her jaw is now wider and fuller, indicating she may have had a chin implant," he says. "But with that exception, her treatments overall are natural and not overdone."

Bryce Dallas Howard

Ron Howard's daughter has had quite the elegant makeover since 2003 (left). Part of the Jurassic World star's sleek new look is a stunning new nose, experts say. "Bryce's nose is slimmer and the tip more refined now," notes NYC plastic surgeon Dr. Michelle Copeland, who does not treat the 35-year-old actress. Likewise, the mom of two's current look gets high marks from the opposite sex!
